

Angela Marie McCardle
By Daughter Linda-Jane
Hamill
English War Bride
1946

In 1999, My mother is still alive. She remembers that she was sick because she was pregnant with her second child. She found the Canadian Soldiers were much friendly than the Canadian nurses. So she would pass her 18 month old baby to one of the fellas and lean over the side to be sick.

She never talked about a host family. She then got on a train and was met by her mother-in-law. My mother has loved Canada she had five girl children and although she has been back to England to visit family on a few occasions this is here home. She always stayed positive even though it must have been the most difficult decision she had ever had to make. Mom did her best to be a good mom to us all. But the life was not as promised. She found heartbreak and many years of sorrow.